The Intermundia research project questions alternating border-scapes of trans-European and intra-European migration, investigating the case of Lampedusa as a metonym of contemporary detention conditions at the entry point to the Fortress Europe. Instead of observing the island of Lampedusa as consolidated institution of 'the waiting room', Intermundia attempts a post-human perspective in order to investigate the ambivalent state of 'in-betweenness' and the (im)possibilities of cultural translation.
